A—A—A—

DISEASES OF MEN.

The importance of the healthiness of the nervous system can best be overestimated: its power over life and death, and the direct benefit which it gives to all human happiness seems to be recognized; its capabilities, as qualities and its powers; the importance of its healthy preservation, and the necessity of its recovery, whether through thought, study, thought, or intense application of mental investigation and research; whether by the use of medical treatment, or by the exercise of moderate and judicious business interests, or by the excessive indulgence of the appetites and propensities of the system. All the above are proved, as they are, as the signs of that state of moderation, what is excess, and when these exist the absolute necessity of promptly seeking advice from an expert who, for a long series of years, has devoted his life to the practice of medicine, investigation and treatment of all the maladies of this most important department, to accurately determine the diseased part, and to apply the best means of recovery, without ever causing any unnecessary suffering. His experience and knowledge, his integrity, his skill, his tact, his tact, thus avoiding the painful slow feeling after the truth, common to the inexperienced and so annoying to the patient, and his skill in the treatment of the disease, what is the master, the extent of the derangement, the probabilities of recuperation and the time required for the recovery, are all facts which are of great practical importance, as well as the usefulness of the prompt application of suitable remedies, is found in the important statements of the above author, and those of other authors, who may be at home abroad, that a very large pro-
